MR. NIKISCH'S FAREWELL.

The thought, doubtless, which was uppermost in the minds of the audience at the last concert for the mass in Chickering Hall last night, was that most unexpectedly the affair had been turned at the eleventh hour into a farewell to Mr. Nikisch, the ctor. It has been under Mr. Nikisch's direction that the concerts of the organization took the high place in popular favor which they have occupied turing the last three years. In saying the we are casting no reflection on Mr. Gericke. The best s in art are not always accepted at once. New-York has always had good orchestral music, and it long a question whether the con-

In fact it was only the cosmopolitan and theral character of the New-York musical public Mr. Gericke did the pioneer work. He did it hopestly and intelligently, and no one can have remore than he when Mr. Nikisch came to garcarried it forward on his own lines, without sacrimethod, to a conclusion which has excited the adsimilion and pride of every true lover of high art. was made to feel the sincerity of the public repret for him last night when, after one of the delightful concerts of the series which he has anducted, the audience remained in the room to call thim back to the stage and thank him by a The concert was changed in character by the ill-ss of Mr. Knelsel, who was to have played the movement of the violin concerto by Brahms.

In his absence Mrs. Nikisch sang with the orchestra "Spring Song." by Feruccio Busoni (the same that she will sing in Brooklyn this afternoon and to-morrov erening) and afterward some songs by Brahms, paderewski and Schumann to the masterly pianoforte sceompaniments of her husband. The performances were all most amiable and sympathetic, and were supplemented by Brahms's arch and coquettish "Verge bliches Staendehen," in which Mrs. Nikisch's voice and vocal manner are disclosed at their best. The orchestral numbers were Berlioz's overture, "Carnival Romain", Wagner's "Waldweben," and Tschalkowsky's and symphony, played in the finished yet virile and dramatic style which accounts for much of Mr.

Nikisch's hold upon the public heart. Mr. Nikisch's resolve to return to Europe is not of long standing. He said last night after the concert ing, March 25. that he had all along expected to make America illarly poignant one for him. He felt, however, that the invitation to become the conductor of the open at Euda-Pesth was such an opportunity as is offered to a musician only once in a lifetime, and that he owed it to his family not to let it go by. He will start for his new field of labors next month, immediately after the completion of his Eoston engageillness of Mr. Kneisel compets the abandon-if the Kneisel Quartet concert to-morrow.

"THE GONDOLIERS" AT THE CASINO.

The labor of reconstructing a fabric for the eye of the mind through the medium of a misrepresentation of it to the eye of the body is too great to be popular. Therefore the audience which heard "The Gondollers" sung at the Casino last night labored not at all, but recalled brighter books by Mr. Gilbert, with only recalled brighter books by Mr. Choert, want brighter scores by Sir Arthur Sullivan, sung more brightly by brighter actors, and so sat and thought and thought. The time passed a little more solemnly than on the first right, something more than emaily than on the first pight, something more than three years ago, when "The Gondeliers" was sung for the first time at the New Park Theatre, for then there was consternation, and that had at least a degree of interest in it; now everything was as everybody expected and there was nothing but apathy.

J. H. Ryley, who appeared as the Duke of Plaza-Toro, is a man of skill and experience, and he showed a clear knowledge of what he was trying to do. Miss fife Chapny, as Tessa, also had lucid intervals, but he rest of the cast combined showed about as much independent.

understanding of comic opera as might reasonably be expected of a baby elephant. Yet the music, indifferently as it was sung, was Sullivan's music, and nobody has yet been found quite incompetent enough to take the melody out of it. The dance in the second act really disturbed the rest of the audience, and before its repose was again established it was forced to enjoy, as a reminiscence, the quartet "In a Conto choos, as a remaining to choose the present templative Fashion." There is nothing in the present production that seems likely to shake the firmly incended unpopularity of the opera.

Her manners had the openness of the bourgeoisie of her province, and some of the effusiveness. This was thought vulgar in Paris, where eremoniousness and reserve are deemed good style. Her beauty turned the cool head of M. Grevy when he was a young advocate. Euphrasie Coralie Fraisse, the future Presidente of the French Republic, had come early in the '40s to Paris with her mother, to eke out the small means which the tanner had left them. The young girl apprenticed herself to a milliner, and the old lady obtained the place of keeper of the linen de partment at a hospital. M. Grevy pleaded for them in some small suit about their right to a vineyard and fell in love with Coralie, as he preferred to call her. His father and her uncle, M. All the same, M. Grevy and Mile, Fraisse set up together as housekeepers. They got married in the year 1848, when M. Grevy was representative of the department of the Jura in the National Assembly. He had been in the spring of that year Commissioner of the Provisional Government in that department. It was impossible for paternal consent to be any longer withheld, and the young lady's uncle had become glad of the prospect of having M. Grevy for a connection. There was a marriage settlement. M. Grevy had some furniture which was catalogued in it, and Mile. Fraisse had in clothes, bedding, jewelry and money just 2,000 france. One of the witnesses of the wedding was the late M. Durier, of the Paris bar, who was also a Narbonnais. I had these details from him, and at the Elysee, too, at the first soirce that M. and Mme. Grevy ever gave there. She i ing a plain, unaffected person, and having the frank manners which were counted much m vulgar in the reign of Louis Philippe than they are now, the story ran that she was a washerwoman. Others said that she was a milliner who came from a village in Burgundy, and that, as she in M. Mue, Greyy looked at the Elysee a kindly, respectable old lady, plain of meaner, but not valgar. She never wore low dresses, and her coiffure was generally on grand occusions a millinery arrangement looking like a cap. Her atthe there was always handsome and tasteful, When the hospitable duty devolved on her of receiving a Queen, she treated her as she might any one else to whom she wished to be particularly civil. She eafertained the Bacens of Spain and Sweden, and the Princess of Wales and the Crown Princess of Denmark. Instead of letting the ladies in attendance on these illustrious personners stand, Madame Greyy bid them be seated. Noticing that a maid of honor of the Princess of Denmark was a little hard of hearing, she placed her mext herself so that she should hear better what she said. This was thought a fearful breach of ciquette. But Mue, Greyy did not set up to know anything of protocols and courtly regulations and standards of rank. She did what she thought sensibly and kind, and if people took it till so much the worse, not for her, but for them.

EFFECT OF COUNTRY LIFE UPON WOMEN.

From Garden and Forest.

From Garden and Forest.

The growing interest in their country homes shown by people who can afford to spend their winters in the city is manifested in the long sojourn that they make in them, and in the springing up all through the country of small estates, which are a refuge for the city-dweller to By to in the sammer. In the adornment of these homes great interest is taken, the problems of horticulture are present to the small cultivator as to the great proprietor, and add interest to his hours of recreation. As has been shown in these columns before, the country gentleman of the days of our forestations has almost departed from the face of the earth. As a Nation our leisure class now consists of women only. In them there can be seen to develop all the vices and virtues inherent to a leisure class. Indoence, luxury, trivisility, narrowness, we find among them, with compensating reactions in the way of activity, prudence, serfousness and at endeavor for larger sympathy with all sorts and conditions of human beings.

American country life for the rich differs widely from English country life, in that it carries with it no exacting duties—no traditional customs to be followed out. The life of an English country pentleman is quite a business in itself. He has tenants to look after, he is apt to be a magistrate, he has a personal concern in the people of his village, who are often his political constituents, he has social relations all over his country his wife and daugsters are equally responsible, and held to strict account in that conservative land, in which people do not find it so easy to escape from obligations as they do with us. The country life is the real life there, the town life the recreation of a few works or months; whereas, Americans may be said to live in the city, and to go to the country for a little change. Their real social relations are all with the city; the natives of the villages near which they spend their summers, not being objects of charity, are practically outside the current of thei

MISS TYNTE'S RECITAL.

Miss Romola Tynte was so kindly received on the ecasion of her recent recital at the Berkeley Lyceum that she has been impelled to give another entertalnment-this time at the studio of Mr. Champ-No. 96 Fifth-ave. Miss Tynte will next Monday afternoon, March at 3 o'clock, in association with ney. No. Mr. C. Hayden-Coffin, and she will recite "The Wreck," Aux Italiens," "Not In The Programme" and other favorite pieces. The exceptional refinement and tellegate beauty of Miss Tynte's elocution, her uncomnon depth of feeling, her skill as an actress in mentional monologue, and the charm of her presence unite in commending her recitals to eager sympathy; and the lovers of this kind of art should improve the opportunity of enjoying her unique interpretation of poedcal literature.
